

Join us for the Summer 2026 Research Series at the College of Staten Island!

The Summer 2026 Research Series, offered by the Department of Biology, is an excellent opportunity for students who are interested in pursuing Pre-Health or Pre-Medicine to build their research portfolios, study with distinguished faculty, and prepare for entrance to specialized schools in the health professions.

Discount: We will offer a 20% discount to any student who plans to participate in multiple paid programs this summer. Please let us know the name of the course and the dates you attend.

CELL BIOLOGY AND MICROSCOPY

Program Description: Cell Biology is the foundation for understanding the biological function in normal and disease states. This early research opportunity is offered by the Center for Developmental Neuroscience and the Department of Biology to high school, undergraduates, and graduates interested in hands-on research experience in cell biology. Students will learn how to study molecular and cellular components and processes of the cell. The proposed workshop will also provide skills in microscopy. The students will apply these techniques to gain experience in cell biology and lab skills.

Students will participate in experiments, submit a final report, experience college life, and receive contact and guidance from the Director/Instructor, technician, postdocs, and graduate students who participate in Summer 2026 research.

Eligibility: High school students who have taken a year of Biology, undergraduates, graduate current college students
